In the second of the Infra Dig masterclass series, the focus turns to payment mechanisms for renewable energy projects and drills down into what underpins the vast majority of projects.

Angus Leslie Melville – editorial director of IJGlobal – speaks to a lawyer who is particularly renowned in the world of renewables and, in particular, is famed for the role she has played in this space.

Natasha Luther-Jones – DLA Piper international head of sustainability and ESG and global co-chair of the energy and natural resources practice – fresh from picking up 2 IJGlobal ESG Awards runs through the mechanisms in as jargon-free a manner as possible.

Starting off with Renewable Obligation Certificates (ROCs) and running through to Contracts for Difference (CfDs) and then on to a slew of other contracts, this podcast answers all the questions you were too scared to ask about how energy companies are paid.
